

ABSTRACT

A process for making microporous structures that can be used as a catalyst support. The microporous structures have high porosity and high thermal stability, combined with good mechanical strength and relatively high surface area. The process
5 is useful for making titanium dioxide for catalyst structures for use for fuel cells, sensors, electrochemical cells and the like.